SCHOLARLY OR CREATIVE ACTIVITIES

Publications

Refereed Journal Articles Published

Asumda, F., Jordan, L. (in press). Minority Youth Access to Tobacco: A Neighborhood Analysis of Underage Tobacco Sales. Health and Place.

This article uses GIS to examine the demographic characteristics of neighborhoods where tobacco was sold to minors, finding significant variation across localities within Florida, and that sales were more likely in Hispanic majority neighborhoods in Miami. Faizal Asumda initiated this project for his capstone project in the MPH program here at FSU, and is currently a research scientist at the Miller School of Medicine, University of Miami.

Jordan, L. (2007). Religious Adherence and Diversity in the United States: A Geographic Analysis. Geography of Religion and Belief Systems, 2, 3-20.

This article describes the spatial patterns of religious adherence and diversity in the United States, finding higher rates, and spatial clusters, of adherence in the Central US, particularly in the Great Plains, and higher diversity in the West, particularly the Pacific Northwest.
